We are waking up and linking to each other. We are watching, but we are not waiting.

The image shows three large, cylindrical industrial silos or storage tanks. Each silo has a white, ribbed dome on top. The silos are constructed from a light-colored, possibly metal or concrete, material with visible horizontal bands or rivets. They are set against a clear, bright blue sky. A semi-transparent grey horizontal bar is positioned across the lower portion of the image, containing the text 'Avoid data silos.' in a bold, black, sans-serif font.

Distance Education Services

The Gordon B. Olson Library is pleased to provide you with library services while you are enrolled at Minot State University.

I am Sarah Henderson, the librarian in charge of making sure you get the library materials you need. If you need any help please feel free to e-mail me or call me at 1-800-777-0750 (ask for extension 3094).

Library Cards

The first step to receiving library services is to apply for a library card:

- If you live in the Minot area, we invite you to visit the library and apply in person for a library card.
- If you don't live near Minot, you can apply using this electronic form. As soon as we receive your application, we will send you a library card. This card will allow you to login to our subscription databases, and will allow you to check out materials from the library.

Logging on to the Library's Databases

If you are off campus and want to search the library's databases, you will need to log in with a login number and password.

The Rutgers University Libraries are a member of the Pennsylvania Academic Library Consortium, Inc. (PALCI). Along with over three dozen Pennsylvania academic libraries and the University of West Virginia, Rutgers participates in PALCI's E-ZBorrow program for the expedited delivery of books. PALCI libraries have developed a virtual union catalog with more than twenty-six million items that permits combined searching and requesting by their students, faculty, and staff. Participating libraries include Carnegie Mellon, Pennsylvania State and Temple Universities, and the Universities of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Journal articles are not available through this service.

Eligibility

Rutgers University students, faculty, and staff are eligible to place E-ZBorrow requests. Students, faculty, and staff at remote locations are eligible, but delivery is available only to on-campus libraries. Borrowers in affiliated programs who are eligible for interlibrary loan service are also eligible for E-ZBorrow. Requestors must have a valid Rutgers library barcode and pin.

How to Place an E-ZBorrow Request

Connect to E-ZBorrow by entering your Rutgers library barcode on the E-ZBorrow log on screen and selecting "Search/Request." You may search as a guest, but you will not be able to submit delivery requests unless you log on with your barcode. Search the PALCI

Web Usability Testing

The Library's Web sites provide a key entry point for users to many of the Library's services, thus making it the hub of technology infrastructure. Ease of use and consistency in design and functionality are key ingredients to building a customer-oriented system. With this in mind, a Web usability team with representation from Management Information Systems, Digital Access Services, Communications, and other Library and UVa units exists to apply both heuristic and usability testing to Library Web sites.

Heuristic testing involves Web experts comparing a site to a set of 10 principles established for a well-running and well-designed site. The heuristic principles are grouped into three categories: info structure and navigation, content and design, and issues specific to search forms and data manipulation. In usability testing, actual users perform certain tasks on a site such as find a particular book, look up a library's hours, or ask a reference question. How quickly and easily the user is able to complete these tasks, or where they have difficulty, tests both the design and structure of a Web site.

The web usability team is responsible for assigning heuristic testing and arranging usability testing by library customers, both internal and external. This group also tallies and records the number of new websites receiving heuristic and usability testing and compares this number to the total number of websites under development or review. The Library's goal is to perform heuristic or full usability testing as appropriate on at least 80% of all websites under development or review.

Subject: Re: Library Website

Newsgroups: gmane.education.web4lib

Date: 2006-04-15 14:37:26 GMT (1 year, 6 weeks, 22 hours and 34 minutes ago)

I'm sure Jon can answer this at least as well as I can, but let me jump in.

Most publicly funded institutions of higher education in the U.S. technically have a legal obligation [I am not a lawyer!] to make their web sites comply with Section 508, though there's explicitly no enforcement provision in that obligation. Regardless, you'd probably agree that you have an ethical obligation to make your site accessible to any of your users who happen to have vision, motor, or cognitive disabilities, especially when doing so is not very difficult. Complying with Section 508 or especially WCAG priority 2 (IMO) goes a long way toward ensuring that level of accessibility.

If you comply with both the letter and the spirit of the HTML and CSS specifications, you take advantage of built-in mechanisms that are likely to make your pages work across browsers and versions; across a wide range of screen resolutions and window sizes--or lack of windows altogether in screen readers; and across a wide range of browser configuration settings (e.g. disabling scripting, as Microsoft continually recommends for IE users).

When explaining this to your director, do not get thrown off by claims that standards-compliant web sites are more expensive to create, harder to maintain, or inherently unattractive. Compliance needs to be taken into account at an early stage in the design process, but from that point on does not add any great burden to creation and maintenance, and does not restrict any half-way imaginative designer.
